START

Situation

Adam, a single dad, is all about doing what's right and working day and night shifts to raise his 6-year-old daughter. Despite his demanding job, he manages to be there for his daughter and instills the value of obeying the laws in both the big and small aspects of life.

One night his daughter was burned by the boiling water. He did not manage to get the medicine and treatment from the nearest clinic since they were closed. He decided to rush his daughter to the nearest hospital. Generally, he drives safely as he knows that dangerous driving will increase the rate of accidents, but in this emergency case, he doesn't because he is too worried about his daughter.

He breaks the speed limits, runs the red lights and horn along the road, and forces other vehicles to make a way for him to arrive at his destination. Luckily, they arrive safely, and his daughter is having medical treatment at the nearest hospital. After a few days, he received a speeding ticket and paid a penalty charge at once. He feels guilty for not obeying the law but is happy that his daughter is recovering.

Background

Conflict → Difficulties → Solution → Guilty → Decision

In this scenario, Adam is faced with a choice between sending his daughter to the hospital in an emergency or delaying receiving medical attention until the following day.

His daughter is experiencing extreme pain, and the closest clinic has closed.

Adam made the snap decision to head straight to the hospital to ensure his daughter got the care she needed.

Adam knows that his situation is against his values and principles and brings dangerous to others, but he would rather break the rules for his daughter's health issue.

He feels that making this choice for his daughter is the best one he can make. He rushes to the hospital while driving recklessly, compromising his moral principles even though he knows it is wrong.

Lost of value

Responsibility

While Adam takes responsibility by paying the penalty, breaking the law initially compromises the value of personal responsibility. By neglecting traffic rules, Adam endangers the safety of other road users.

Calmness

Adam lost his calm in this situation as he was too worried about his daughter. Adam decided to break the law instead of chilling out and finding another solution to replace his dangerous decision. Losing composure can make others feel a loss of safety

Self-esteem

Adam goes against his 'rule-follower' and obedient values by breaking the law to take his daughter to the hospital, causing him to feel shame despite knowing the risks.

Universal Values

Integrity is firmly entrenched in ethical and moral principles and value, even when you are in an emergency. Adam is aware that his choice go against his values and rules. Adam can therefore avoid making his immoral choice if he has rational worth.

Integrity

Respect involves treating people with fairness and appreciating their intrinsic value. If Adam shows respect for the road users and other drivers, he will be respected by the others. This can help him avoid getting into an accident dispute.

Respect

3.

Rational is thinking and acting completely clearheadedly with full knowledge. Adam is overly concerned about his daughter, causing him to lose his ability to think and judge better solutions. He can avoid his dangerous action by having rational value.

Rational

Brain storming

Adam can seek help or support from the police to help him in this emergency situation, they can make way for them to arrive at the hospital safely

Adam can call an ambulance for help as this is the best and safest way for people who are facing health emergencies.

Although the journey will be delay, Adam can follow the traffic rules but not taking risk to rush to the destination.

Adam can look for alternative way to relieve his daughter pain such as cool the affected area by cool water.

Conclusion

Adam faced a difficult situation where he had to choose between his values and his daughter's health. He compromised his values and broke traffic rules to rush to the hospital, causing him to lose his sense of self-esteem. He could have sought alternative solutions, like calling an ambulance or seeking help from the police, to avoid compromising his values. In conclusion, it is important to remain calm when facing difficult situations to make better decisions that align with our values and maintain our integrity.

Self-Reflection

Adam is a single father and a law-abiding citizen. In this situation, he chose to break the traffic laws and drive dangerously for the first time, as his daughter has an emergency health issue, even though he knew that this decision was dangerous and not allowed.

Reporting

I understand that in this situation, Adam's concern for his daughter is excessive due to the emergency issue. He felt ashamed and paid the fine immediately for atonement. However, he must take the overall situation into consideration, as they might be involved in a road traffic crash.

Responding

I think there are many other ways for Adam to choose a better solution. He could call an ambulance for help, as that is the best way to handle an emergency health issue. He can seek help from the nearest police station or try to relieve his daughter's pain at home first.

Relating

Reasoning

This is like when I want to cross along the road when the traffic light turns green and suddenly a car driving at high speed and honking loads makes way for him. This is a dangerous situation if I don't notice the car rushing towards me. Lastly, an accident may happen.

I have learned that we must always keep calm and think about the consequences of our decisions to avoid putting ourselves in a dangerous situation.
